The Outer Sunset is the perfect destination for a weekend getaway, with Golden Gate Park to the north, San Francisco Zoo to the south, and 2 miles of Ocean Beach to explore in between. Once the site of sand dunes, the Pacific Coast, adventurers can find many hidden treasure just a short walk down Irving, Judah, Lawton, Noriega and Taraval Street. Surf shops, friendly neighbors, and cozy cafes give this corner of San Francisco a true community resource. By 1879, 155,000 trees were planted. In 1874, initial work in Golden Gate Park — largely by horticulturalist John McLaren — centered on planting trees to stabilize the dunes that covered three quarters of the area. By 1879, 155,000 trees were planted.

ABOUT

The Outer Sunset is the perfect destination for a weekend getaway, with Golden Gate Park to the north, San Francisco Zoo to the south, and 2 miles of Ocean Beach to explore in between. Once the site of sand dunes, the Sunset as we know it today took shape after the 1906 Earthquake. The Great Highway Gallery — 3649 Lawton St

HISTORY HIGHLIGHTS

Monarch, California’s last captive grizzly, was the inspiration for the San Francisco Zoo. In 1899, the bear was brought to San Francisco and lived more than 20 years in captivity, mostly in Golden Gate Park, on our profile at our store tag.

Surfing legend Jack O’Neill invented wet suits and sold them in his newly opened surf shop on the Great Highway near Wawona Street in 1952.

Two windmills standing near the Pacific Ocean in the western corners of Golden Gate Park were built at the beginning of the 20th Century to pump fresh water into the park’s lakes and irrigation system. The Murphy Windmill featured the longest surf shop on the Great Highway near Wawona Street in 1952.

In 1874, natural rock in Golden Gate Park — largely by horticulturalist John McLaren — centered on planting trees to stabilize the dunes that covered three quarters of the area. In 1874, 155,000 trees were planted.
